Re: The Power of Words

Dear Duncan, I have been buying your magazine since December '92 and I am amazed at the articles of which you write. I might add, some are a bit beyond my comprehension, but nevertheless I am still very much interested in reading them, and I feel if more people worldwide were to read your magazine, we would be more concerned about what was happening in our country.

The reason for writing is in reference to information we were told from a person who has just returned to Australia from USA and particularly Salt Lake City. I am sorry I have little information for you, but with your exhaustive supply of material I am hoping you could get more information for all of your readers.

The information is that scientists have now got a machine whereby, if you have just had a conversation in a room, they can take this machine into the room one hour later and pick up your conversation. Frightening, isn't it.

My source was involved with the Church and his remarks after were, "Every word you speak goes into infinity to God—and God will be able to relay every word we've ever said. The power of words is in life and death."

Good luck and cheers for a super mag!

Regards,

Pamela D., Nundah, Qld.

Re: Machinations

Dear Editor, Thank you for an excellent and informative magazine. I have only recently become aware of your publication. Having ordered several back issues, I find I am compelled to read every page. The articles are interesting and thought-provoking. The more I read of the 'cover-ups' and conspiracies, the angrier I get at the hidden faceless people who have manipulated us for so long. Thank you for having the courage to print the information, so making us aware of their machinations.

I am particularly interested in the informative articles on AIDS, vaccinations and other cures which have been suppressed in order to keep us sick and so line the pockets of the drug corporations and other vested interest groups.

Your publication is providing answers to some of the questions I have been asking and observations I have made for many years. Thank you again.

Re: The Powers that Be

Dear Duncan, Congrats on NEXUS breaking into the US market. I've always wanted to ask you (more so now that you've entered 'the heart of the beast' so to speak), aren't you afraid the US 'powers that be' will do something to close down your US office or bring serious trouble to you here in Australia?

The warning you received on your exposé on the drug trade (editorial, vol 2, no. 9)—was it Australian-based or US-connected? I'm surprised 'they' didn't close NEXUS down rather than just the threats and warnings—especially now you are in the USA.

Good luck, and party on dude,
Edward H., Sydney, NSW.

(Dear Edward, Thank you for your kind comments. In answer to your question, we are not afraid that the 'powers that be' will close down our operation. I am sure they perceive us as mere small fry and are not really bothered by us. The 'warnings' we received regarding publishing articles linking the intelligence community with the drug trade were locally made, but internationally sourced. Ed.)

Re: Fluoride Warning

Dear Sir, The recent public announcement by the NSW Health Department that children were in danger of being 'overdosed' by fluoride, although long overdue has alerted parents across the state to treat fluoride with caution. The 1991 study by the National Health and Medical Research Council in its recommendations warned of this very same problem. It must be a long way from Canberra to Sydney as it took the NSW Health Department two years to even mention on this warning.

The use of low-fluoride toothpastes, and none at all for those under two, was recommended by a very shamefaced Health Department official, Dr Weidenhoffer, who has been advocating its safety and benefits for many years. I personally believe that there is no safe level of fluoride as it is an accumulative toxin. I always buy NON-fluoride toothpaste for my family. I choose to do this as it is my right as a parent to decide what I know to be the healthy way to look after my family.

Recently at our local supermarket I noticed what I thought to be a new brand of herbal, fluoride-free toothpaste. It was sitting next to my usual brand, almost identical in colouring, wording and packaging to the fluoride-free one. I picked it up and was about to buy it but while at the checkout I started to read the very fine print. Lo and behold, it had exactly the same levels of fluoride as the ordinary fluoride toothpastes which are very prominently marked.

I find this very dangerous. Those allergic to fluorides can suffer badly if they accidentally use this poison. Also, mothers trying to eliminate fluorides from their children's toothpastes could be easily deceived. This particular type of toothpaste has only recently appeared on the shelves since the Health Dept warning, and I have to wonder if it is an attempt to try to tap the market of those concerned by the warnings. If a product contains fluoride, it needs to be very prominently marked for safety.

I have written to The Investigators whose excellent exposé of the problem appeared only weeks before the Health Dept's tardy surprise announcement. Also, I have written to the appropriate authorities because of my concern that someone could easily suffer a severe allergic reaction, and for the safety of our children.

The point of my letter is to warn consumers who want fluoride-free toothpaste. Make sure the packet actually states fluoride-free, or non-fluoride; check the small print, and if you also notice this sort of thing, get in touch with the above bodies and complain. Send in the empty packets, as I have, and remember, 'consumer beware'.

Yours sincerely,

Therese M., Port Macquarie, NSW.

Re: KIA vs CIA

Dear Duncan, This is my second time writing (you didn't print my first letter). I am meant to be writing about one thing, but while I'm here I might just say a bit more. I am 13 years old, first discovered NEXUS with issue 12. Me and several friends of mine are UFO freaks. We go camping just to watch and wait for one. I have been involved in two instances when I witnessed some UFOs.

I also like to read about military forces and secret societies. Me and my friends have gotten together to form the KIA, a secret organisation dedicated to gathering information relating to the military. We have intelligence officers as well, but the most fun we have reading about other societies, so if anyone has any information or runs a 'secret society', then write to me.

I liked the WACO article. It was well-written and definitely proved that there was a different side to the story.

I just thought that I would tell you what KIA stands for. It is Kids Intelligence Agency. Could you tell me what CIA is? I know it stands for Citizens Intelligence Agency, but what do they do? The only CIA I know of is the American CIA.

Anyone wishing to write to me if they are a CIA member, write to me c/- NEXUS.

Dustyn F., Pithara, WA 6608.

Re: The Next Revolution

Dear Duncan, Good on you, mate! Thank you for blockbuster articles like "The Truth Behind Waco" and "Nuclear Briefcase Bombs". It's about time people heard the truth behind the news instead of the filtered propaganda that we get on the government-controlled TV hypno-box.

Some of the "Letters to the Editor" in that issue criticised you for peddling negative issues. I understand their theory about peace and blissful consciousness, but we do have some governmental shackles to throw off, both 'down under' and 'up top', before people can enjoy their birthright: the freedom of self-expression and self-determination without supervision by hostile 'authorities'.

The Soviet Union broke apart so fast that we still can't believe it has become history. The Union of American States is next. One of the anti-federal war cries in the next revolution will be "Remember Waco!". When big government is buried next to the dinosaurs, we can all turn to the luxury of positive thoughts without the nagging feeling that we have let down the side of 'freedom versus suppression'.

Sincerely,

Victor T., Plymouth Rock, Massachusetts, USA.
